

Clair jumps up and turns off the television. She walks back to the bed sits down and just looks.

Clair: "When did he decide, we were not capable of fighting this battle?"

Buddy: "Our schooling here proved that."

Wynona: "Then, one of these Indians reported directly to the Time Walker that we would not be able to stand the shock of this war."

Penny: "Then their scene about teachings was a big front."

There is a knock on the door. everyone justs looks at one another. The knock continues. Pam walks to the door and opens it to find Bob Bigtree who walks right in and smiles. There is nothing worst then a smiling Indian who knew everything while you suffered ancient lessons.

Bob Bigtree: "I hope you had a good stay and because you graduated with flying colors, we all thought we would have a small Indian dance and song in your honor and give afew presents. The women have some medicine that will take away that old tired feeling and make you feel like a new person. Its called- Fire Water."

Everybody breaks in laughter, not from the joke, but the dry humor. If that was a joke, it went over like a lead balloon. They follow Big Tree out the door and back to that house where the party is in full bloom.

There's no cups or glasses here. You drink straight from the bottle and the only chaser here is your breath, which/^{you} seem to always be looking for it. There touching, because they get down to a real party, no fronts and no games. A young girl comes shouting something in their language.

Everyone crowds/^{into} the next room, where a television is making an annouement. Officials from the United States are signing an agreement with the Indians, and Time Walker can be seen in the background. Clair points and everyone smiles. The United States agrees to restore the lands that have/^{been} dismembered and articulated, to their original state. they further agree to pay compensation and to keep out any non-traditional eyes from seeing their secret lands. The announcer says this a monumental occusion for the Indians

Clair jumps up and off the television.; She walks back to the bed

Sits down and just looks.

Clair: "When did he decide, we were not capable of fighting this battle?"

Buddy: "Our schooling here proved that."

Wynona: "Then, one of these Indians reported directly to the Time Walker that we would not be able to stand the shock of this war."

Penny: "Then scene about teachings was a big front.."

There is a knock on the door. everyone just looks at one another. The knock continues. Pam walks to the door and opens it to find Bob Bigtree who walks in and smiles... There is nothing worse than a smiling;

Indian who knew everything; while you suffered ancient lessons.

Bob Bigtree: "I hope you had a good stay and because you graduated with flying colors, we all thought we would have a small Indian dance and song; in your honor and give a few presents. The Women have some medicine that will take away that old tired feeling and make you feel like a new person. it's called-> Fire Water,"

Everybody breaks in laughter, not from the joke, but the dry. If out the door and back to that house where the party is in full bloom.,

There's no cups or glasses here. You drink straight; from the bottle and the only chaser here is your breath, to always be looking;

for it, touching, because they get down to a real party, no fronts and no games. girls come shouting something in their language.

Everyone crowds/the next room, where a man is making an announcement, ciale. from the United States are signing an agreement with the Indians, and Time Walker* can be seen in the Clair points and everyone smiles, The United States agrees to restore the lands that have been theirs and their State., they further agree to pay for secret lands.. The announcer says this for the Indians bien.