

"A Political Prisoner" is a prize captured in a war within a state used to appease a condition of political groups struggling to control either the affairs or economy of a given location. Now that did not define it too clearly but it was never meant to have a clear definition outside the classification of a group of individuals who appear to speak the same languages we do but, this same language has a definite and more precise meaning. Now, if you take each word as stated in the definition and look up its meaning in a law dictionary such as Black's, the definition is clear and precise. The prize is the prisoner serving a prison term used to either make an opposing political group to the one in power to either come to terms or remove established members. The prisoner himself belonging to none of the groups but only used to show the group in power how well it can flex its muscles. Whether we care to believe this or not between 25 and 30% of inmates in Federal Penal Institutions classified S-4, S-5 and S-6 are political prisoners. This number is in the thousands and represents only a small portion of the individual state penal institutions who are political prisoners. This can be used as a rule to measure, before the passage of certain public laws, prisons throughout the United States were only two-thirds full. Today, these same penal institutions are operating one-third beyond their capacity. Remember beyond capacity is more than being full. That is an increase of 100%.

The United States has political prisoners, how long this country has been in the practice of incarcerating political prisoners is unknown by the author. Until you have been one and have defeated in whole or in part the conviction that put you in prison you can only assume without any facts how a political prisoner is used to appease a condition of political groups struggling to control either the affairs or economy of a given location.
