

One noted characteristic you can always find in civilized people that is an act that by assumption forgives any of their deeds or events.

To put their religion into another language and then speak it. Such an act had been recorded on the Mora language in England.

Bishop Richard Cumberland of Peterborough, England in the year 1716 learned to read, write, and speak this language. He had a New Testament in the language and could hold Church Services from it.

Ironic is the only word to fit Bishop Cumberland's act, because the language was his first tribal language that his descendants had long forgotten which one day came and they spoke it once again, then it was gone. Then 225 years later he learned to speak it.

Yes! There was a war over there. The Moorish War.

Brother against Brother only one Brother didn't know his Brother while the other did. That is why there was a war.
